VOL. XXI.—NO. 6313 | PORTLAND, OREGON: TUESDAY, JULY 12, 1881. | PRICE—TEN CENTS.

NO CHANGE.

The President Continues to Improve Slowly and Steadily.

GUITEAU KEPT IN PROFOUND IGNORANCE OF GARFIELD'S CONDITION.

Drs. Baxter and Bliss have a "Scene" over the Conduct of the President's Case—The former led out of the White House by the Coat Collar.

SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The president has passed a comfortable night and his condition shows an improvement over that of yesterday. Pulse, 96; temperature, 99; respiration, 21. Bulletins will be issued daily at 8 A. M. and 1 P. M., and another in the evening, until further notice.

1 P. M.

Favorable progress of the president's case continues. Pulse, 100; temperature, 99.8; respiration, 24.

Physicians' Statement.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The following telegram was sent by attending surgeons this afternoon to consulting surgeons, Doctors Agnew and Hamilton:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, 1 P. M. During the past 24 hours favorable progress of the president's case has continued. He has taken and retained 22 ounces of milk and 1 ounce of rum. This morning at 9 A. M. he had besides, a slice of toast softened in milk, and at 11:15 took 15 grains of bi-sulphate quinia. There has been no irritability of the stomach at any time. Last evening at 7:45 he received one quarter grain of morphia sulphate hypodermically, and slept well during the night. The wound was dressed antiseptically yesterday evening.

4 P. M.

The president continues at about the same rate of progress as for several days past. The cooling apparatus is working perfectly. The temperature of the room was reduced to 84 degrees this morning, and the president complained of feeling cold. Doctors do not look for any permanent improvement for several days.

7 P. M.

The president has had rather more fever this afternoon. In other respects his condition is unchanged. Pulse, 108, temperature, 102.8; respiration, 24.

Unofficial Bulletin—9:30 P. M.

The condition of the president has not materially changed since the date of the last official bulletin. He complains a little of weariness and muscular soreness, and has once or twice manifested slight apprehension that his recovery might leave him in some way maimed or disabled so as to incapacitate him for physical exercise. He said recently to one of the attendants: "I wish I could get upon my feet. I would like to see whether I have any backbone left or not. But whatever doubt there may be in the mind of the president as to the existence of his physical backbone, there is none in the minds of his friends as to his moral backbone.

Unofficial—9:30 P. M.

The president's temperature which at the date of the last official bulletin, was higher than at any time during the day, has since steadily fallen until now it stands at about last night's figures. No special importance is attached by attending surgeons to these daily fluctuations in temperature and pulse. At this stage of the president's case they are to be expected. Several conditions of the patient at this hour are favorable and satisfactory.

Unofficial Bulletin—Midnight.

The president passed a quiet day, but had a little more fever than usual this afternoon. He has taken 25 ounces of milk, an ounce of rum and a piece of milk toast during the day without indications of gastric disturbance, and has slept at intervals fairly well. Since the date of the last official bulletin his pulse and temperature have fallen to about the mean of the past three days, and he is now sleeping quietly. His room throughout the day was kept at a steady temperature of 75 degrees. On two different occasions, by way of experiment, the temperature was lowered to 70 degrees, but each time the president complained of being too cool. After ten days of weariness, danger, heat and suffering, he remains brave and cheerful as at first, and is only restrained by his physicians' orders from talking unreservedly with those about him. The temperature of the president's room has been maintained at 77 degrees, which is 15 degrees lower than the temperature of the external air. The refrigerating machine is now pumping into the room [illegible] feet of air per hour, at a temperature of 75.

Gossip from the Sick Room.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Judge Advocate General Swaim, an intimate friend of President Garfield and almost constantly in attendance upon him since he was wounded, said this evening in conversation that the president's condition is very encouraging indeed. Referring to the president's diet which consists principally of milk, Gen. Swaim said that the patient invariably takes it with very great relish and as a rule appears to relish it. An exception to this rule, however, occurred this afternoon in the following manner: The president asked for a drink, whereupon Major Swaim handed him some milk to which the physician had added a small quantity of old rum. The president after drinking it looked at Maj. Swaim with a distasteful expression and said, "Swaim, that's a rum dose, isn't it?" The president continues to take chicken broth occasionally, with good results. He suffers no internal pain from the wound, but experiences considerable soreness of the muscles. No one excepting Mrs. Garfield and attendants, have been admitted to the sick chamber to-day, it being the desire to keep the president perfectly quiet. Early this afternoon Maj. Swaim said the president desired to see one of the bulletins which he had heard some one speak of as having been issued. The latest bulletin was brought from the secretary's office and handed him. After perusing it, he remarked smiling that he did not think it necessary to post his name before the country every few hours. Maj. Swaim thinks that with to-day, the greater part of the danger will pass. That unless something unfavorable occurs, of which there is at present no indication, the president will gradually improve and his ultimate recovery will be merely a question of time. His recovery, Maj. Swaim said will necessarily be slow and tedious, but in my opinion he is now on the sunny side of life again.

Mr. Crump, steward of the executive mansion, who sat up with the president from 11 last night until this morning, said that he rested very well. During wakeful periods he inquired after the different gentlemen connected with the mansion, and spoke in a general way with reference to what was going on in the house. The strict instructions of the physicians against his talking any more than is necessary, will not permit of extended conversation. Inasmuch as attendants in consequence thereof do not show any disposition to talk, knowing the cause, the president does not insist upon it. Between 6 and 7 last evening Dr. Bliss stated that the president was doing as well as could be expected, and he (Bliss) felt highly gratified with the manner in which the president was progressing.

Some False Rumors.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—A gentleman from New York who arrived in the city this morning, says that there is an impression among many persons in that city that bulletins issued regarding the president's condition are more or less colored for the purpose of allaying public apprehension. He also says that many persons incline to the opinion that the original telegrams sent from time to time to Drs. Agnew and Hamilton, consulting physicians, regarding the president's condition, are not given out for publication, and that telegrams purporting to be copies of those sent to the consulting physicians are prepared for the purpose of preventing any undue excitement, and consequently do not give the condition of the president as it really appears. These theories, if they do exist, are entirely erroneous, inasmuch as the official bulletins issued are written by the physicians in charge and contain the president's true condition at the time of their issuance.

The same plan is adopted with regard to information which is dispatched to consulting physicians. In both instances the contents are invariably telegraphed to the press from original copies. It is not the intention of attending physicians to express any opinion in the bulletins issued, but merely to convey to the public the patient's true condition from time to time.

General Items.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—White House Messenger Smith saw Guiteau prowling about the White House grounds the night before the shooting.

A woman in black comes about the jail, talks with the authorities and claims to have some papers which may be important in the case. She is understood to think that a man from New York, alleging himself to be a lawyer, is connected with the crime. She is said to be Mrs. Charlotte Smith, who writes for democratic newspapers.

Blaine to Lowell.

The following was sent this morning:

WASHINGTON, July 11.

To Lowell, Minister London:—At the beginning of the tenth day since he was wounded, the symptoms of the president are all hopeful and favorable. Suppuration goes on with no higher pulse or temperature than could be expected. His milk diet of a pint and a half per day is relished and digested. His physical strength keeps up wonderfully, and his mind is entirely clear and active without showing excitement. His physicians do not count him beyond danger, but general confidence in his recovery is strengthened every hour. BLAINE, Secretary.

General Thanksgiving.

COLUMBUS, July 11.—Governor Foster sent the following telegram to the governors of states and territories tonight:

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11.

Present indications strongly encourage the hope that the president will recover from the effects of the horrible attempt upon his life. It must occur to all that it would be most fitting for the governors of the several states and territories to issue proclamations setting apart a day, to be generally agreed upon, for thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for the blessed deliverance of our president, and for this great evidence of his goodness to this nation. If this suggestion meets your approbation, permit me to name the governors of New York, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Maryland and Ohio as a committee to fix upon a day to be so observed. Please reply. CHARLES FOSTER.

Chicago Contributes.

CHICAGO, July 11.—Not less than $12,000 was forwarded from Chicago yesterday to swell the Mrs. Garfield fund.

Gladstone's and Bismarck's Problems.

[New York Herald.]

It is curious that in one European country we should see statesmen opposing emigration, and in another, its near neighbor, other statesmen urging government aid to send the people out of the country. The truth is the Germans are anxious to leave because they are governed too much, the Irish because they are not governed enough.

Springfield Republican: "There are two boating associations here," wrote a Japanese student home, "called Yale and Harvard. When it rains the members read books."

THE ASSASSIN GUITEAU.

He is Kept in utter Ignorance of the President's Condition—How he passes his time, etc., etc.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—"This is hell," said Guiteau, peevishly, as he paced up and down his narrow cell yesterday, and asked the guard to tell him whether the president was dead or not, and if alive still, what were the chances of recovery. No reply was made. He then declared that he would not tell any more to any official who should visit him until he should be allowed to see the papers. There is general commendation of the course pursued in regard to Guiteau. What he would like would be that the newspaper reporters should have access to him, that his opinions and sayings should be spread abroad, and that he should be allowed to feed his love of notoriety by gloating over the papers daily. Instead of this, no individual is allowed to reach him, and no one allowed to visit him save law officers of the government and district. This seclusion is the worst punishment that could be inflicted upon him, and he chafes under it. A company of artillery is stationed inside the jail wall and an officer is constantly on guard in the corridor in front of Guiteau's cell. One of the deputy wardens is also there constantly, but they are forbidden to speak to him. They are placed so they could see and instantly frustrate any attempt at suicide or escape. There is no possibility of his breaking out or of a mob breaking in. The outer wall of the prison is three feet thick, within that is a corridor 15 feet wide. Then comes another three feet of masonry, and inside these are the cells. The cell he occupies was formerly occupied by Percy Brown, a grave robber, who is now serving a term for blackmailing. When Guiteau arrived Brown was removed to another. While Brown was in the cell he ornamented the wall with pictures cut from illustrated papers. Above the door is a motto card with the inscription "Be faithful." In the upper part of the wall alongside of the bed is a wood cut representing General Washington and his wife. Below it is a good-sized wood-cut of Garfield and a cartoon from Puck representing the president and cabinet getting into a "tally ho" coach. All these pictures were in the cell when Guiteau entered it. Guiteau receives the same treatment as the rest of the prisoners. His prison cot is furnished with a straw mattress, two blankets and a pillow. Every person is required to keep his cell in order. He leads a very humdrum life; but probably gets better meals than he averaged on the outside, and certainly he has to make less shifts to get them. At 9 P. M. the gas is turned off and lights in the cells go out, when there is nothing for him to do but to go to bed. He eats and sleeps well. There could be no severer punishment to a person of his depraved mind and perverted feelings than the seclusion and ignorance in which he is kept. His egotism and vanity are immense, and nothing troubles him save that he is not allowed to revel in the details of his crime. Gen. J. S. Crocker, the warden of the jail, said to your correspondent to-day: "Since he has been here he has never manifested any sign of regret or remorse on account of his act. He takes pride in the notoriety he thinks he has gained, and would talk about it constantly if allowed. He was very inquisitive at first in regard to events, but no one was allowed to talk to him or give him any attention, and he has stopped asking questions because he finds it no use. He lounges on the bed a good deal of his time. Sometimes he walks up and down his cell for exercise, and he reads about half his time. After he found that he could not get hold of any newspaper he asked for some reading matter. The keeper mentioned several books, but he did not care for them, and said he would rather have the bible. He was given one, and said that he would read it through by sections." "I suppose," said the keeper, "he meant that he would start at Genesis and go straight through as as that is the way he seems to be doing." Although he receives no information, he surmises that the president is still alive from the fact that he is not arraigned. During the warm weather of this week he wore only a shirt and a pair of pantaloons, and went about his cell barefooted. Once he complained of feeling ill, and the jail physician found that he was somewhat bilious and prescribed for him. When Gen. Crocker approaches the cell Guiteau always endeavors to get into conversation with the hope of getting some information, but the wardens will tell him nothing, and he returns sulkily to bed and goes on with his biblical studies. The officer who locked up Guiteau in the cell at the police headquarters a few minutes after the shooting, said today: "The man looked frightened when he was brought in. He was very nervous, and his eyes were snapping and wild. I put him in a cell as quickly as possible. He at once became cool and collected and when I asked him why he had committed this terrible deed, he calmly and firmly said 'It will be of no use to ask me questions for I am a lawyer.' He refused to say anything whatever regarding the affair at the depot." One of the police officers who accompanied Guiteau from the police headquarters to jail says: "I don't think the fellow is so crazy or without sanity that he is not able to see. He was in abject terror on the way to jail."

THE ASSASSIN'S PISTOL.

Experiments show that it was as near Harmless as Revolver well could be.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—The officials in charge of the case against Guiteau have made an experiment the result of which gives the greatest possible encouragement to the doctors, and explains, in a measure, the favorable symptoms of the president. For instance, the size of the wound was so large in the first place as to admit a finger. It followed, almost as a matter of course, that a large ball, entering where it did and piercing to the extent that the ball naturally would at such short range, a fatal result must follow. The experiment of this morning has thrown new light upon the subject. Evidently Guiteau had never handled firearms, and knew nothing about pistols. The pistol used by him was purchased at a sporting bazaar opposite the treasury department. It is one of the cheapest pistols made, selling for $7. So cheap is this pistol that at a distance of twelve or fifteen feet the best shot could hardly hit a door with it, unless by accident. The assassin was not over six feet from the president when he fired. The first shot did not touch him and when the coat of the president was removed the ball was found in the sleeve of his coat. This remarkable fact, hardly noticed at the time, was the basis of the investigation this morning. It was argued that if this ball, fired at a distance of six feet, did not have force enough to pass through the double fold sleeve perhaps the president's wound was not as serious as had at first been supposed.

Other cartridges of this pistol have since been examined, and similar cartridges. It is found that although the ball is large, there is the smallest possible quantity of powder in the cartridge. The cartridge itself is very formidable looking, but in fact the supply of powder is found to be utterly inadequate to force the ball through any great substance. This ball fired against a board at a distance of a rod fell back, merely making a slight dent. It is now thought not impossible that the ball, after passing through the tight-fitting coat and underclothing of the president, spent its force in some of the layers of the muscles. The weight of evidence all tends that way now. Of course the surgeons will not take any chance of investigating for the ball so long as the president's symptoms continue favorable. The fact, however, of his being so well, and continuing to improve so steadily, argues that the ball could not have forced through to any vital part. This discovery has had the effect of allaying the doubts and fears of those who have looked upon the darkest side of the case from the first.

Another Washington dispatch says: It now turns out that the pistol used by Guiteau was a cheap, common weapon, a self-cocker, and as it was so easy to fire, many wonder that he did not fire more shots. The pistol was bought on the 5th of June, for $10.

AN AFFECTING INTERVIEW.

Visit of Secretary Blaine to Vice President Arthur.

CHICAGO, July 8.—The following special from Washington to the stalwart Journal will go far towards putting the vice president in a proper light: Secretary Blaine called upon Vice President Arthur on Sunday at the house of Senator Jones, where he has been staying since his arrival. Mr. Arthur's usually fresh complexion was pallid, and his eyes were red with sleepless grief of the past few days. He was dressed in dark clothes of light texture. He seemed bowed by the appalling suddenness of the great trial that overshadowed him. When Mr. Blaine drove up he alighted, and barely nodding to the attendants that stood outside of the door, passed in without a word. His face was the picture of unutterable woe, and he appeared to be distracted in its contemplation.

Senator Jones and General Arthur sat silently in the library, awaiting the arrival of messages that came by hurried messengers almost every five minutes. When the servant opened the door, the stately secretary walked in, and General Arthur rose hurriedly to meet him, with extended hands. For a moment neither spoke, and tears suffused the eyes of both. There was a cordial grasp of hands, and then Mr. Blaine, in husky tones, said gently, "I fear we can reasonably hope no longer. I am afraid our president is at the point of death." General Arthur let go the secretary's hand and dropped back in a chair. Till then he had hoped against hope. He was suffering from nervous exhaustion and hours of poignant grief, and his strength almost failed him at the announcement of what he had longed not to hear, and had prayed might not happen.

In a few seconds he mastered his feelings enough to ask in broken tones for the particulars. The secretary gave his reasons for his fears and in tones of horror declared that he saw reasonable grounds on which to base expectation for which he had looked since the pistol of the assassin had done its work.

General Arthur would talk of nothing else but the fate of the president, and when it was mentioned that he might desire to summon congress together, he would not listen to anything, but said in a choking voice, "There was time enough for consultation of that kind if the worst must happen." He still could not bring himself to realize that he must be brought by violence to the executive chair of the nation. He should rely upon the advice of the cabinet, whom he trusted to do what was best when the necessity was upon them.

Blaine rose to go, and Arthur again pressed his hand and thanked him for the kindness he had shown him in this affliction and mindful of the consideration that he had manifested at all times. Thus these two men parted with the tenderness of brothers, the vice president leaning upon the master will of the secretary for guidance in this crisis of his life.

How Gen. Grant keeps the wolf from his door.

[New York Star.]

Gen. Grant is no longer a pauper ex-president, his income being thus summed up:

Four per cent. interest on $250,000	$10,000
Salary on Gould's road	25,000
Other incomes	10,000
Total	$45,000

The suite of rooms at the Fifth Avenue hotel which he has just given up cost him $35 a day, while Conkling only paid $17 50 a day for his room.

"Won't you please play us something, Miss Hammerandbang?" asked Fogg. "I should like it ever so much," said she, looking at her watch, "but really I have no time." "So I have heard," replied Fogg; "but we will overlook that, you know."

DOCTORS DISAGREE.

Professional Brethren have a Spat over the President's Case—Shameful Conduct of Dr. Baxter—Etc., Etc.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The true story of the quarrel between Doctors Bliss and Baxter is as follows: When Bliss [illegible] the president said to him: "I want you to take charge of me." Nothing more was said about it. During Saturday some [illegible] physicians volunteered their services and were present at the White House all day Saturday [illegible] with Dr. Bliss. [illegible] Mrs. Garfield was sitting at the head of the bed [illegible] "Mr. President, [illegible] something must be done with the [illegible] physicians that are here [illegible]." The president said, "Dr. Bliss, as I said to you before I expect, I desire you to take charge of the case." Mrs. Garfield also said that she wanted him to [illegible] for the president. Then the doctor said, "I wish you would select three consulting physicians. I would like that number." The president said, "I should prefer you to select them. I desire to leave everything to you, and to try in the way." Mrs. Garfield assented to this and said "Doctor, you may be certain that you will be absolutely in charge, and shall be embarrassed in no way." Dr. Bliss then selected the surgeon general of the army, Dr. Reyburn, because he is one of the most trustworthy physicians in the city, and a personal acquaintance of the president, and Dr. Woodward on account of his eminence in pathology. The president asked Bliss to see that the other kind physicians should be politely thanked for their kindness. Dr. Bliss then walked into the consulting room and said to the gentlemen present that there would be another consultation later in the afternoon, expecting in the meanwhile to send each a note telling them that their services would be no longer needed. Before the consultation broke up, Dr. Baxter made his first appearance. He had not been in the White House all day Saturday, and had not been in any of the consultations. He came in, shook hands with Dr. Bliss, and asked how the president was. Dr. Bliss said that he was not doing very well. The call the physicians retired. Dr. Baxter said nothing at the time. About half an hour afterwards, Dr. Bliss, Dr. Reyburn, Dr. Woodward, and a son of Dr. Bliss, were seated in the consulting room engaged in conversation, when Dr. Baxter came in. He was very much excited and quite red in the face. Somebody looked up and said, "Hello, Baxter, what is up now?" Dr. Baxter advanced to Dr. Bliss and said, "I want to see the president." The doctor was overcome by the importance of the demand, but said in a quiet manner, wishing to avoid any appearance of refusing his request, "The president is asleep now; no one can see him at present," intimating he might see him at another time when he was awake. Then Baxter broke out with, "I demand to see him. He is my patient. I am his family physician. You have no right to keep me out of his room." The medical gentlemen present were so astonished at this extraordinary statement that for a moment nothing was said. Dr. Baxter had been the family physician of the Garfields, which he [illegible] could not have changed his position. Other gentlemen had been called in attendance by the president and by his personal directions were in charge. Finally Dr. Bliss, who is a very energetic man, said: "I do not know anything about your claims to be his family physician, but one thing is fully certain, and that is you are not in charge. [illegible]" [illegible]

The Spoils System Responsible.

[Sacramento Record-Union.]

When the first shock of grief and indignation caused by the attempt upon the president's life passes off, the American people will be compelled to realize that this dreadful tragedy had its origin in the accursed spoils system. The disgraceful deadlock at Albany, with all its preliminary and attendant scandals, is traceable directly to that system. The whole quarrel between Conkling and the administration, the whole programme of the so-called "stalwarts," the vices of Grantism, the corruption which has repeatedly paralyzed the arm of justice—all spring from the same detestable source. All the virulence and malignity of the factional fights which have so humiliated and disgusted patriotic and sensitive minds, have found their source in the lust of spoils. Whatever is vile and mean and dishonest and shameful in our politics to-day, owes its evil qualities to the spoils system. The most pretentious and arrogant exponent of that system is Roscoe Conkling. The most abject and intolerable outcome of it is Charles Guiteau. It is not necessary to establish any direct connection between these men to make the fact apparent that the system which Conkling has been willing to wreck his party in upholding is accountable for the infamous deed which has so horrified the nation. It is that system which has prostituted the machinery of government to the base uses of a class of politicians possessing neither patriotism nor principle, neither convictions nor high intelligence; a class of sordid self-seekers who recognize in the contests of parties nothing more than securing the control of offices; who look upon congress and the administration as machines for the distribution of gifts under the convenient disguise of patronage; who care nothing for measures or men, but only for their own selfish interests, who are neither republicans or democrats, but political pirates and highwaymen; who seek to turn every movement to their own narrow ends; who fight reform to the death because they know that it would be fatal to them—who are disease-breeding parasites upon the body politic.

The Disease of Office Seeking.

[San Francisco Bulletin.]

Guiteau, who shot the president, had the disease of office-seeking. He believed that he would obtain an office in reward for real or fancied services to some political party. He went to Washington for that purpose. He wrote letters, besieged cabinet officers, made himself a nuisance generally, but not more of a nuisance than many other office-seekers had been, whose importunity was just about as great. He claimed an office. This phase of office-seeking has been strongly developed within the last few years. Guiteau had "claims." He wanted a change of administration, because that would afford a new deal. It is hardly necessary to cite this one example, seeing there are so many who to-day are hardly more rational.

The Crisis in English Agriculture.

[J. J. Jennings's Cable Letter.]

Those of your readers who only know English country life from the poems of Mrs. Hemans and others about the "cottage homes," and the "merry homes," the "stately homes," and so forth, would be taken aback if they were to visit rural England just now. Hundreds of once magnificent estates are now tenantless. In some counties nearly 50 per cent. of the land is out of cultivation; in all, farms may be rented for the taxes, property is a drug, and rent rolls are rapidly diminishing. In olden times every Englishman who had made money in business invested it in land, if property with the object of founding a family dynasty. The East Indian, the nabobs as they were called, spent fabulous sums in the good old days of the rotten boroughs in acquiring estates which brought with them seats in parliament, and in later times the cotton lords and other captains of industry sank their fortunes in the "landed" assured of a perpetual income and contented tenantry. All this belongs to a past age. The tenant, manacled by feudal customs and oppressed by tithes and big rents, is unable to face American competition and live, and abandons the farm to swell the angry mob in the boroughs. The laborer is no longer satisfied to live from hand to mouth and enjoy the "bliss of ignorance." He wants land of his own and threatens to take it if it is not given to him. He belongs to a union controlled by active propagandists of radicalism and insists on the franchise not as a favor, but as a right of which the squire and the parson have defrauded him through all these years. The clergy do not fare much better than the squires. Tithes are paid grudgingly. Hodge has become an iconoclast as well as a radical, and the call of the drum ecclesiastic which used to frighten him has lost its terrors. The lords, the natural guardians of the church, are powerless to stay the tide that is washing at the foundation of establishment, and can find no hope to save an England which all of property [illegible] [illegible] Half of [illegible] are for sale or to purchase an estate there are a hundred ready to snap at half a bid. Where all this is going to end, the wisest men here are at a loss to know.

The harvest prospects have been somewhat improved by copious showers, but at best it will fall below the average.

The late Franco-Prussian war cost France [illegible] francs. The Germans lost [illegible] men on the battle-field; 11,046 died subsequently from wounds; 12,301 died from fatigue or malaria; and 4,000 disappeared. Then 127,867 were finally wounded, being in all 178,356 individuals. The French lost in all the above causes 253,000 men.

The republicans of the United States are pretty much agreed to let New York slide until the bosses can be got rid of. There is more hope of Mississippi than of that state.

The Captive.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 11.—Parties just arrived from Chihuahua, Mexico, say that papers were found on the road near the place where Captain Pugh was captured by Indians when they attacked the stage some forty miles below El Paso several days ago. The paper bore these words written by Mr. Pugh and in a prominent head line, "I am a captive. The finder of this is entitled to a hundred dollars on delivering it to Morrison & Co., Chihuahua. I am a prisoner among the Indians. Do what you can for me." The paper is dated and looks in the handwriting. It is thought that if Mr. Pugh is in the hands of Victoria's Indians he is being held as hostage, for several Indians are now in the hands of Mexican authorities at Chihuahua. It is further thought that the Mexican authorities exchange some Indian children they hold for Mr. Pugh, but doubted whether they would give up their prisoners.

Still another Outrage—Pugh Captured and Tortured by his Captors.

Jeff Davis and his Critics.

HARRISBURG, July 11.—In an interview published in the Press, Jeff. Davis says in regard to his recent book and the criticisms of Joe Johnston, Fry, Hill and others: "I am very well satisfied with the book's reception. I did not expect or wish it or myself to escape criticism. I suppose however, I am like most men, I would rather be criticised than not noticed. I undertook the work for the purpose of placing upon record the truth about our cause and the conduct and demeanor of our people. Having done that I am content. Most of the criticisms I have seen strike me as having been written before the book was read, necessarily historical, the part is incomplete. Everything of which it treats had to be epitomized, much had to be omitted and much is necessarily glanced at. Several books as large as either of the volumes of my work have been written upon the battle of Gettysburg, and probably as many more might be written. Many volumes could probably be written upon the siege of Vicksburg and other great events of the war. More than thirty volumes instead of two would have been necessary for a complete review of the rise and fall of the confederate government and its military history. Who will write that history I cannot say. Much of it I fear will never be written."

BY ATLANTIC CABLE.

An English View of our Debt Reducing Policy.

LONDON, July 11.—The Economist again criticises the debt reduction policy of the American government, and says that the present unprecedented surplus will probably be increased during the ensuing twelve months. It contemplates the probability of the whole outstanding debt being converted before many years into three per cent bonds. It urges that the taxation is kept needlessly higher to secure the lowering of interest is not dependent on maintaining the present rapid rate of payment. The Economist makes all this the basis of an argument against the tariff, desiring to apply the surplus revenue to the reduction of import duties rather than the reduction of the debt. The same journal, discussing the proposal of the Bank of England to buy silver to be held in its issue department, asserts that the bank will not buy unless it can buy safely, nor will it under any circumstances buy a large amount. It seems now inclined to favor the excessive hoarding of silver by other countries as a means of protecting the Bank of England against loss in such a transaction. It complains that the American government delays stating what it is willing to do and business men here continue to regard the monetary conference of little practical importance, and ridicule the idea that England is ready to make sacrifices in order to benefit American silver kings.

In Lewes Gaol.

Lefroy's capture, though effected by the police, does not relieve them from disgrace that the career of inefficiency. Their protracted search has been due wholly to outside information. Lefroy was removed early this morning to Lewes gaol, Newcastle. The Chronicle publishes a letter from Lefroy, written in April, alleging that he was a contributor to several American journals.

HOW THEY FIXED HIM

Concerning Theophilus and his Solve full of unsifted Thistles.

The letter of Theophilus French to Leland Stanford, president of the Central Pacific, has caused much astonishment throughout the country. For this the C. P. W. may throw some light thereon.

NEW YORK, June 29.—To the Editor of the World. Sir: Referring to your editorial of yesterday in relation to Theophilus French, auditor of government railroads, permit me to call your attention to the fact that said French, accompanied by his wife and niece, and two treasury clerks and their wives, were furnished with a hotel Pullman car from Washington via the Southern Pacific railroad to San Francisco, and returned via Central and Union Pacific, and were amply and bountifully supplied with wines, edibles and all other creature comforts so generously afforded by government employees upon such occasions as this excursion proved to have been. The whole trip was made at the expense of the railroads, but vouchers were all the same filed for expenditures made by the party and the whole amount charged to our good old Uncle. But then this is a reform administration.

YALE AND HARVARD.

The College Boat Race and Yale's Victory.

NEW LONDON, July 1.—[illegible] the Yale crew won. Harvard [illegible] [illegible] At the [illegible] was fine, Harvard [illegible] at the end of the first mile and a half. At the end of the [illegible] Harvard a length and a half [illegible] Harvard now lost and to their oars [illegible] [illegible] At the navy yard line, [illegible] a spurt of almost superhuman effort, Yale now rowed with power, but the spurt and [illegible] was gaining the lead, until at the two and a half mile buoy the Yale crew [illegible] Harvard a length and a half to the rear, and at the end of three miles Yale had the advantage of two lengths. Yale's men were spurting frequently, they could not gain an inch more on Harvard, who now and then again regained. The race was one that has had no parallel in the history of boating in New London. Yale struggled for a greater lead, and Harvard cut it down, and thus, spurt answering spurt, the two boats turned the line on the same relative position that had been maintained for nearly a mile, Yale leading by two lengths. Time, Yale, first mile, 4:50; second, 5:51; third, 5:43; course, 22:14. Harvard, first mile, 5:07; second, 5:53; third, 5:45; course, 22:19. In the evening the Yale men celebrated their victory by escorting the crew to the Crocker house in a procession, singing as they marched.

"ROUT" OR "ROOT."

The Difference in Pronunciation that Cost Eight Hundred Dollars.

[Pittsburg Dispatch.]

A few weeks ago in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and before Judge Kirkpatrick, a case was tried in which a farmer living in one of the outlying townships was the plaintiff and the county the defendant. Some time ago a wagon of the plaintiff was crossing the creek on a bridge, which was the only bridge, broke, and the cattle fell into the water and was drowned. A suit for damages was instituted, but it dragged over for trial until a few days ago, when the jury awarded the plaintiff damages in the sum of $800. A funny story in connection with the verdict has just leaked out. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Burning of Columbia.

[illegible] [illegible] "Nobody probably imagines that much would have been left of Massachusetts and Boston if they had been in the track of a victorious southern army. No orders would have been issued, but the work would have been done, not necessarily by the troops in line, but by the great salvage of riot, waste and destruction, which sprouts around an advancing army. These are the tares which arise from the horrors of war which South Carolina welcomed in 1861 and reaped in the ashes of Columbia in 1865. The war was one between two communities, and it had to be fought out until one or the other was pulverized. The weight of the war on the south, its suffering and its sacrifices, few in the north realize, but there never was a civil war in history fought with less barbarism and stained with fewer outrages, or the burning of a state capital on which the hate of the north had centered for four years would be a matter for dispute or doubt. The simple fact that the burning of Columbia is the solitary outrage brought forward even in the south is its own proof of the moderation of northern troops.

The Early Religion.

[Duke of Argyll in Contemporary Review.]

We have found in the most ancient records of the Aryan language proof that the indications of religious thought are higher, simpler and purer as we go back in time, until at last, in the very oldest compositions of human speech which have come down to us, we find the Divine Being spoken of in the sublime language which forms the opening of the Lord's Prayer. The date in absolute chronology of the oldest Vedic literature does not seem to be known. Prof. Max Müller, however, considers that it may possibly go as far back as 5,000 years. Prof. Monier Williams seems to refer the most ancient Vedic hymns to a period which cannot be more remote than 1,500 years B. C. But whatever that date may be, or the corresponding date of any other very ancient literature, such as the Chinese, or that of the oldest Egyptian papyri, when we go beyond these dates we enter upon a period when we are absolutely without any historical evidence whatever, not only as to the history of religion, but as to the history and condition of mankind. We do not know even approximately the time during which he has existed. We do not know the place or the surroundings of his birth. We do not know the steps by which his knowledge "grew from more to more." All we can see with certainty is that the earliest inventions of mankind are the most wonderful that the race has ever made. The first beginnings of human speech must have had their origin in powers of the highest order. The first use of fire and the discovery of the methods by which it can be kindled; the domestication of wild animals; and, above all, the process by which the various cereals were first developed out of some wild grasses—these are all discoveries with which, in ingenuity and importance, no subsequent discoveries may compare. They are all unknown to history—all lost in the light of an effulgent dawn. In speculating, therefore, on the origin of these things, we must make one or other of two assumptions—either that man always had the same mental faculties and the same fundamental intellectual constitution that he has now, or that there was a time when these faculties had not yet risen to the level of humanity, and when his mental constitution was essentially inferior.

Mr. Froude's Many Faiths.

[From the Saturday Review.]

Mr. Anthony Froude, as we all know, is nothing if not an iconoclast. He has passed in his time through almost as many "phases of faith," as another prominent writer of the day, but no one of them has he ever lacked the courage of his opinions or the courage of attacking their opposites. In his early Oxford days he was an ardent disciple of Mr. Newman, and wrote, as we have just reminded him, "Lives of the Saints." From Newmanism, as it used then to be called, he suddenly turned to what is now designated Agnosticism, and instead of "Lives of the Saints" we had "Shadows of the Clouds" and the "Nemesis of Faith" from his facile pen. But soon another change passed over the spirit of his dream, and he became convinced that these creeds, both of them, lead to the wrong place, and he next posed as the apostle of that robust, if somewhat illogical, form of English Protestant orthodoxy, which takes Henry VIII and Queen Bess as its patron saints and treats all who oppose them in politics or religion as little better than fools or fanatics. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] master, the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] He has also, more recently, [illegible] a sketch of Julius Caesar, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] France to be contented with [illegible] an elaborate parallel between Caesar and [illegible] [illegible] He has now [illegible], perhaps by the illustrious example of his old master, to give us a sort of Apologia pro Vita Sua in the shape of a series of letters on the Tractarian movement, which has been published in Good Words.

"Beauty in Woman's Dress," by Mrs. Oakey. Harper & Brothers. [illegible] a book on current fashions, [illegible] of mere generalizations in regard to dress. It is a book of acute observation on the general harmonies of dress and therefore is worth attention. The author observes: "Possibly the unconscious training in taste that has grown from the very general study of decorative art accounts for the marked improvement in dress of the mass of the people during the past five years." But good may be better, and hence her book. It is a grateful change to turn from mere fashion publications to a book of this description.

The latest issues of the "Franklin Square Library," Harper & Bros., are "Visited on the Children," a novel by Theo. Gift, and "A Costly Heritage," a novel by Alice O'Hanlon. Price 20 cents each.

Rev. George Hepworth has published a book under the singular title of three exclamation points "!!!" However, the title corresponds well enough with the book, because the book itself is unreasonable and extravagant. The motive of the story is metempsychosis. According to the theory propounded by Mr. Hepworth's Gerald Rousset when a man dies to his former life and enters upon this one he retains as a general rule, no recollection whatever of previous stages of existence; but occasionally death lingers in the work of dissolution so that the soul is left with a more or less definite recollection of the past. This is what happened in the case of Gerald Rousset, of Ulster county, New York, who, visiting Berlin, recollected that his soul had lived in that city while attached to a previous body, and even recognized the house he once used to occupy. This is curious enough as a speculation, but too fanciful to trouble ourselves about. There is, however, a class of readers who will devour this book. Published by Harper & Brothers.

Will Carleton has issued another volume of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] The Debate is highly [illegible] this [illegible] Bret Harte's story of Truthful James [illegible] at the "Row at Brokeup Bar" is [illegible] the Stanislaus" is his necessarily the first place that some merit is entered in and attempt to dispute it. A poet like Mr. Carleton who illustrates so well the features of our rural life is a treasure to his country and we shall look with pleasure for the forthcoming of the future which he promises as in the preface. Published by Harper & Brothers.

Many Discoveries.

[Philadelphia Bulletin.]

The comet was first "discovered" by about 500 different persons, by night watchmen, newspaper editors, associated press messenger boys, wicked young men who were out scandalously late, a man who had insomnia and got up to sit by the window, a disgusted father who could not sleep because the baby was restless, and three men who arose and went to the window for the purpose of projecting missiles at cats.

"Adolphus, my dear," said she, "it's nearly a year since you first began to call." "Yes, I believe so," nervously. "And we've talked about books and music every night." "Y-yes, I think so," more nervous than before. "Well, I—I don't you think a change would be agreeable?" There was "a change" in a few weeks time. The pastor made it.

A BAD HABIT.

The star route swindles furnish a warning example of the looseness with which people sign petitions and recommendations. The records of the postoffice department show that in one case of "expediting," involving a swindle to the extent of $150,000, the names of Senators Maxey, Vest, Cockrell and a score of other senators and representatives, some fifty members of the St. Louis chamber of commerce, and several army officers, including General W. T. Sherman, were attached to the petition asking for supposed increase of service and increase of pay. It is not at all probable that these gentlemen intended to do any thing wrong in the premises, or that they in any way profited by the wrong. They were simply accommodating, and signed the papers, without making proper inquiry as to the facts, simply because some friend asked them to do so. It is charged that Assistant Postmaster General Brady suggested to the star route contractors the necessity of procuring signatures of members of congress and other public men to their applications for increased pay in order to cut off investigation should complaint be made. And it now transpires that the congressional committee of investigation, having been shown the papers bearing the signatures of these high public functionaries, suspended further investigation and made a "whitewashing" report in order to avoid public scandal. This fact goes far to say the least, toward excusing President Hayes for not ordering this business to be looked into when the suggestion that something was wrong in the department was made to him. It will be remembered that when the suggestion was made to Hayes he remarked that a congressional committee, composed mostly of democrats, was making the investigation, and that if there was anything wrong they would certainly expose it, since by so doing they could cast odium on the republican administration. Hayes was mistaken that time. The members of the committee found the names of too many democrats attached to applications for increase of the pay of contractors, and hence concluded to pigeon hole the evidence. The lesson should not be lost upon senators and representatives in congress, officers in the army and others. No man should, under any circumstances, affix his signature to a paper unless he is absolutely sure that the alleged facts stated in it are true. The habit of signing petitions without looking into them is almost universal, and many an unworthy object is carried by it. It is a bad habit, and people should be on their guard against it.

A NOTEWORTHY INCIDENT.

In Chicago the boss system has received a check which is noteworthy and important. Postmaster Palmer of that city is "Logan's man." Like certain office-holders in Oregon, he supposes his accountability due to his political boss, and not to official superiors at Washington. In order to bring the Chicago postoffice into full harmony with Logan's wishes and purposes, Postmaster Palmer dismissed his principal deputy, John M. Hubbard, who was not a good ring man, and put a "stalwart" in his place. There was no pretense that Mr. Hubbard was not a good and efficient officer. The only objection to him was that he was not a blower and striker for the boss,—and Logan, holding the same theory of his own relation to the government and the public service as that held by Conkling, had pronounced against Mr. Hubbard, and the latter had to go. But the attention of President Garfield was called to the case. The president was unable to see that the offices of public administration in Illinois were the personal property of Senator Logan any more than such offices in New York were the personal property of Senator Conkling; and therefore after an interview was held with the postmaster general on the subject, the postmaster at Chicago was instructed to reinstate at once the official whom he had decapitated. This naturally made a stir in Chicago. Postmaster Palmer rushed off to see Boss Logan, and the two wondered what the country was coming to when senators could be "insulted" in this way. Logan's henchmen were all thrown into a dreadful state of excitement and commotion, and tried to relieve themselves by predicting loudly that the boss would find means of supporting and enforcing his "rights." The position of a subordinate in a postoffice isn't one of much consequence, but this incident is full of interest and importance, as it is interpreted as notice from the president that officials are to understand that they do not hold their positions from senatorial bosses and that the public offices are not the property of said bosses to be distributed by them among their blowers and strikers as rewards for personal service. This affair took place three or four days before the attempt to assassinate the president. Logan probably was not astonished that the wicked audacity of the president in interfering with "stalwart rights" had called down such a stroke—though of course he could not but deplore it.

JEFF. D. AND HIS BOOK.

If Jefferson Davis expected that his book would find its way into every southern household and the library of every northern Bourbon, he has been doomed to disappointment. In fact the work has fallen still-born so far as the majority of the southern people are concerned. There is no rage for it as the soured old fellow supposed there would be. The men who commanded the southern armies, so far as heard from, instead of accepting the opinions and approving the criticisms of the book, condemn them as being unjust and wide of the truth. These frank statements have weight with the people of the south who do not care to spend their money merely to gratify the man who, more than any one else, brought so much of sorrow and misery to their once happy homes. The fact is Davis has lost the hold he once had upon the people of his section. They do not look upon him as the embodiment of all that is great and good as they were prone to do during the war. Its total failure, and the crushing out of the hope that a southern confederacy could be erected on the ruins of the republic, have had the effect to set the reasonable portion of the people in the states late in rebellion to thinking how they were duped and misguided by such men as Davis, Toombs, Cobb et al. They have had time for reflection since April, 1865, and realize that the issues are dead and buried which Davis strives to keep alive through his mischievous book.

In the Vicksburg Herald, a democratic paper, but one that believes in progress and has shaken off its old Bourbon proclivities, we find a communication written by a "Southern Woman" which shows something of the feeling entertained toward Davis. Says that lady: "The southern woman who buys one copy of 'Jeff' Davis's Book,' and thereby puts five dollars in his pocket, deserves to suffer all the torments that have resulted from the late civil war. Whilst that old fire-eating democratic (?) demagogue is enriching himself in this way, drawing money from impoverished southerners—impoverished by him—but who blindly and foolishly look upon him as something to be admired, simply because he was president of the confederacy, he is laying the foundation for his own comfort, not caring for the poor unfortunates whom he has ruined any more than he did for the precious blood he recklessly spilled in that most horrible of wars. Abraham Lincoln, who tried to stop that flow of blood and save the people of the south, was taken while this demagogue is here yet, to vampire-ize the people. Southern women who were reared in the lap of luxury, but who are now their own cooks and washerwomen, may condemn this advice if they choose, but there is one who will not give of her war-worn mite anything to re-establish Mr. Davis in his former grandeur whilst she is begging the 'beautiful colored lady' to give her a little assistance this hot weather with the washing at the rate of $10 per month, or 75 cents per day."

In a recent address upon the powers and duties of the press before the Northern Indiana editorial association recently, Mr. Richard Smith of the Cincinnati Gazette presented some remarks on the now happily almost obsolete credit system, saying: "When the Gazette company changed from the credit to the cash-in-advance system there were $80,000 due on the books from weekly subscribers alone that had been accumulating for a third of a century. Of that amount not $6,000 cents were collected. We employed a man and furnished him a good horse and sent him off on a collecting tour. In six months the horse died, the saddle and bridle were pawned for keep, and the man returned a considerable balance against the company. We sold the books for old paper and called those credits lost." THE OREGONIAN had a similar experience twenty years ago. When it changed from the credit system to the rule of pre-payment it had thousands of dollars outstanding, part of which it tried to collect. But it never collected half enough to pay the expense incurred in the effort. No newspaper worth the name now follows the credit system, or continues any paper beyond the time paid for. If the newspaper be a good one it is sought and willingly paid for in advance. If it be a worthless one it is pushed by importunity upon those who don't want it, and who can seldom find means of stopping it.

Journals of the upper Mississippi valley are rejoicing over the arrival at Glasgow in sound condition of a large lot of wheat sent forward from St. Paul by way of New Orleans, and subject to the severest test to which it could have been exposed,—that is, intensely hot and generally rainy weather, during the whole time it was in transport from St. Paul to the Gulf. It was a question whether grain could be shipped through safely during steaming hot weather; but now it is claimed that this successful experiment turns Jay Gould's "winter route" for grain to Europe into something like a summer excursion line. It is now demonstrated that grain can be shipped from the upper Mississippi valley to Europe by the river route at about as low a rate as from New York. This is an immense advantage. A St. Paul paper looks for large immediate results from the success of recent experimental barge shipments, and predicts the development of this feature of the river trade into surprising proportions.

As matters now stand, the result of the contest for the mayoralty is not in itself very material. But it is material that elections be honestly, legally and fairly conducted. The bribery employed in the election was frightful; and besides this the vote of one of the wards was so handled that no one has the slightest confidence in the declared result. Moreover, members of the council have stated that they were offered large sums of money to decide the result in favor of one of the contestants. These are the matters concerning this election that are material. It is not a question merely whether one man or another shall be mayor, but whether our elections shall be an utter farce, or not. The common council has not met this question as it should have done. Of this neglect there will be fruit hereafter.

"This is hell," remarks Mr. Charles Guiteau, as he realizes that he is not permitted to pose further for notoriety. It is a remark which would equally have expressed the feelings of Mr. Roscoe Conkling at the time the truth dawned on his mind that he couldn't walk back into the senate with his dramatic strut and "endorsed by his state," to gain further notoriety through his war on the administration. It is hard to say which of the two "stalwarts" is the more disappointed.

A special report for the census bureau states that the holders of United States bonds at home number over one hundred thousand, out of a population of fifty millions. There are few persons who own large amounts of these bonds, but individual holders of small amounts are very numerous. Their numbers indicate a wide distribution of moderate wealth, and at the same time prove the confidence of the people in the government.

Austria has more public libraries than any other country in Europe. They number 577, and contain altogether 5,475,798 volumes. France has 500 libraries, Italy, 453, Prussia 398, Great Britain only 200, and Russia 145. Of these the National French library is the largest, containing 2,078,000 volumes; the British Museum next with 1,000,000, while the Munich library possesses 800,000.

Mr. James Parton, in a late article in the Atlantic Monthly, advises the increase of salaries as a means of putting public officials above temptation. He says: "Let congress build suitable houses for the cabinet and judges, multiply their incomes by four, and no longer permit a secretary of state to pay for the dinners given to the diplomatic corps—the guests of the nation.

What experts say will be the finest light house in the world is being taken, piece by piece, from a foundry in Philadelphia to a rock off Cape Henry, in Chesapeake bay, where it will be located. It will be all of iron, weigh 1,000,000 pounds, and require 7000 pounds of bolts to put it together. It will be octagonal in shape and 155 feet high.

The effect of the vote in the common council last evening was to leave as counted for Mr. Simon a plainly fraudulent ballot—a ballot expressly declared by the statute to be fraudulent, and on this ballot his election is claimed. As the whole case is thoroughly understood by the public, it is needless to multiply words about it.

The telegrams as to President Garfield's condition are not very clear or satisfactory. Still, it appears that the hopeful symptoms continue, though it is now manifest that a good deal of time will be required for his recovery. Ten days have now elapsed since the wounds were received.

The Yorktown centennial commission have formally accepted the model of the proposed monument to be erected to commemorate the crowning victory of the revolution. It will cost $100,000. Secretary Lincoln, in charge of the appropriation, will direct the work to begin at once.

The Daily Oregonian.

TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 12, 1881.

OREGONIAN AT THE RESORTS.—Parties can have THE DAILY OREGONIAN sent to them at any of the seaside resorts, at $1 per month, or, leaving their address at the business office of this paper.

OREGONIAN AT ASTORIA.—Extra copies of the DAILY at E. C. Holden's, for the accommodation of visitors.

CITY.

LOST IN THE WOODS.—Last Saturday, a party from Clackamas county, says the Telegram, came down on to Johnson creek blackberrying. They, of course, soon scattered through the woods, each one intent on finding the most berries. After an hour or so one lady, a Mrs. Thompson, concluded to join her husband, and to her dismay found that she was out of hearing and lost in the woods. After wandering about in the tangle for some hours, she fortunately struck an old road, which she followed up and late in the evening found her friends. She was worn out and almost fainting with fright and hunger when she reached camp.

OVER THE CASCADES.—The O. R. & N. Co.'s steamer Idaho, which has run for many years between the Upper Cascades and The Dalles, was brought down over the cascades yesterday morning, Captain J. W. Troup at the wheel. The passage was made without accident or extraordinary incident. She arrived here at 4 P. M. The Idaho will probably be overhauled and repaired, and placed on the Puget sound route.

NEW CATHOLIC CHURCH.—The new Catholic church which will be erected [illegible] in East Portland will be 40x80 feet and a substantial frame. Bids for the construction of the building were opened and found to be as follows: Mr. Jenkins, $3936; Mr. De Burgh, $4850; Mr. Monroe, $4465; Mr. Quinlin, $4725; Mr. Lyons, $4[illegible]; Mr. Downey, $4765. The contract has not yet been let, we are informed, but will undoubtedly be awarded to Mr. De Burgh.

CLEARING THE ROADWAY.—Messrs. D. P. Thompson, J. B. David and Jos. Smith, the contractors for clearing the roadway for the railroad between this city and The Dalles, are almost through with their work. There are but two miles of timber to clear away this side of the Cascades, and three miles this side of Sandy—making only five miles of roadway yet to open. Over 100 men are engaged and the work will soon be finished.

GOING EAST.—T. N. Ford, Esq., of Olympia, will leave on the outgoing steamer to-morrow. He goes as delegate to attend the session of the right worthy grand lodge of Odd Fellows, which will meet at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 19th of September. Mr. Ford is accompanied by his wife. They will proceed direct to Boston, and before returning visit a number of the eastern cities.

PROPHETIC FEAR.—The Spokan Times of July 5th, says: "When Charlie Cornelius was in this city a few days ago, Mr. Samuel Arthur asked him to remain till after the fourth. Mr. Cornelius replied that on account of a family feud he was afraid his brother-in-law, Powers, in Portland, would shoot his father." How prophetic this fear was the sequel sadly proved.

IN DRY DOCK.—The steamer Oregon, on reaching San Francisco, on the last trip, was placed in the dry dock, and is now receiving a thorough cleaning. Her hull, which had become quite foul, will be scraped and repainted and some slight repairs be made to the vessel. She will be as bright as a new dollar in a week or two and resume her place in the line.

ON TRIAL.—The case of the State of Oregon vs Thomas Jackson, charged with making an indecent assault on the person of little Ethel Andrews, was called for trial in the state circuit court yesterday afternoon. The state was represented by District Attorney Caples and Mulkey, and C. A. Ball, Esq., appeared for the defendant.

THE MANDAMUS CASE.—In the circuit court yesterday morning Judge Stott asked if counsel for the petitioner had any further authorities in the case of Simon vs. R. L. Durham and others, constituting the canvassing board of the city vote. One authority presented and the cause continued under advisement.

PROSECUTING MUSICAL STUDIES.—Mr. M. O. Lownsdale, now living at 265 Fifth avenue, New York, writes to a friend that he has begun musical instruction under Signor Errani, one of the finest teachers in the United States. He doesn't like the desert work, and much prefers Oregon to the East. He will probably return in December.

A. O. H.—The state convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians met in Astoria Saturday. About fifty delegates were present. The following officers were elected: State delegate, Thos. Dealy, Astoria; state secretary, J. J. Byrne, Portland; state treasurer, Jos. R. Wiley, Portland.

CERTIFICATES.—Librarian Oxer is now issuing the new certificates of perpetual membership, which bear appropriate designs, to the members of the Portland library association who are entitled to the same. So far there are 54 such members, and the list is increasing.

CUT THEM DOWN.—There is an ordinance in existence against the Canadian thistle, and requiring all property owners and occupiers to destroy these weeds before the seeds ripen. Those who neglect to observe the provisions of the ordinance are subject to a fine.

GOES TO MARYLAND.—Rev. George F. Plummer, rector of Trinity church, will leave on the outgoing steamer to-morrow morning en route to his former home in Maryland. He will spend several weeks in visiting relatives and old friends.

WORK PROGRESSING.—The work on the east side railroad bridge spanning the Molalla river, is progressing. An entire new structure is being put in, in place of the old one, which the company feared might soon become insecure.

THE FERRIES.—The Jefferson street ferry company are negotiating for the purchase of the Stark street company's boat Eliza Ladd. In case of such sale, Knott Brothers will build a staunch boat especially adapted to winter travel.

IMPROVING.—No unfavorable symptoms were developed yesterday in the case of Jack Powers. The physicians are strongly inclined to believe that he will recover.

TRIP TO ASTORIA.—The steamer Lurline will probably make a trip to Astoria next Saturday, and return the following Monday. Look out for the ad tomorrow.

NEW HOSE.—Willamette Engine Co. No. 1 received by the steamer Elder 300 feet of fire hose. This hose is what is called the New Jersey pattern.

TRANS-CONTINENTAL EXCURSIONISTS.

The following ladies and gentlemen leave by the Elder to-morrow morning en route to Chicago, Niagara Falls, New York and Boston. They compose the excursion party arranged by Capt. J. M. Gilman.

THAT ONE BALLOT

WHICH DECIDES THE MAYORALTY, COUNTED FOR SIMON.

Chittenden, Gerdes, Hewett and Raleigh Vote for Him—Testimony to show Fraud in the Second Ward to be Introduced To-night.

The city council met at 7:30 last night, every member, including Andrus, present. President Hewett took the chair. As usual the lobby was crowded, much to the inconvenience of the councilmen. After minutes of the three previous meetings were read and approved, Kellogg moved that the disputed ballots be taken up. Carried.

Gerdes moved to take up ballot numbered 160, cast in the second ward, hitherto not returned to [illegible]. It has the name D. P. Thompson printed, [illegible] Simon written, and a heavy line through both. It was unanimously rejected at the recount Saturday afternoon, after very careful examination. Arguments of ten minutes each were made by Messrs. S. Williams and C. B. Bellinger in favor of counting the ballot for Simon, and by Messrs. R. Y. Thompson and I. W. Whalley in favor of rejecting it.

Honeyman moved and Kellogg seconded to count the vote for Simon. Lost by the following vote: ayes—Chittenden, Gerdes and Hewett; nays—Honeyman, Keller, Kellogg, Nicklin and Raleigh.

Ballot numbered 200, containing the name of D. P. Thompson printed, and that of Jos. Simon written, neither one scratched, was taken up. Arguments were made at some length by the same gentlemen.

Gerdes moved that the vote be counted for Thompson.

Nicklin stated that this motion was very ambiguous and he would like to see it amended.

Raleigh offered a substitute that it be counted out.

Roll call began, and the crowd pressed eagerly around the railing.

Chittenden's name was first called, and he voted "no." This surprised everybody. Raleigh jumped up and said, "You want to aye." Chittenden seemed surprised. Then the chair and Gerdes told him how he wanted to vote. Then there was a muddle. To straighten things out and get a new start Raleigh's substitute was laid on the table.

Honeyman moved that the vote not be counted for Simon. Lost by the following vote: Ayes—Honeyman, Keller, Kellogg, Nicklin; nays—Chittenden, Gerdes, Hewett, Raleigh.

The chair before voting said, "In voting on a question a few days ago I followed the strict letter of the law, and found out afterwards that I had made a mistake. This time I will not follow the case, but take the common sense view. I vote 'no.'"

As the vote was counted Saturday for Simon, this gives him one majority.

Gerdes moved that the clerks be summoned with the tally sheets, and that the findings of the council be announced.

Mr. Whalley gave notice that he was ready to introduce testimony showing irregularity and fraud in the second ward, and gave a brief statement of the case.

Judge Bellinger answered, denying the allegations.

The council took a recess until 7:30 this evening to hear the testimony.

STATE TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

Eighth Annual Meeting—Address of Welcome by Prof. Warren.

The eighth annual State Teachers' Association held in Portland, assembled at Taylor street M. E. church at 7:30 last evening.

After prayer, State Superintendent L. J. Powell stated programme for organization, whereupon Prof. D. M. C. Gault of East Portland was nominated for secretary, Miss Effie Dimmick for first assistant and Miss Caples for second assistant. All were unanimously elected.

At the conclusion of Prof. Warren's address appropriate music was rendered and the large audience dismissed.

New Oregon Industry—Machine-made Shingles.

In passing through Front street a day or two ago, our attention was attracted to several bundles of cedar shingles which were stacked up outside the store of one of our wholesale merchants. We stopped to examine the goods, which we found to be of excellent quality, both as regards material and manufacture. From their uniformity of size, shape and dimensions they are sure to be declared by builders and contractors, infinitely superior to split or shaved descriptions. It is self-evident from inspection that they will lay more even on the roof, and will be capable of more close and exact adjustment than those heretofore in general use in this section. It would appear that they will be specially adapted to the climate of Eastern Oregon, Washington territory and the Willamette valley, as if properly placed in position they cannot fail to keep out the dust, drifting snow and rain. Upon inquiry we found that the firm of D. J. Malarkey & Co., of Front street, are the agents for the manufactory, which is situated about three miles below the mouth of the Willamette river. Mr. Malarkey informs us that he will be glad to show samples to any intending purchasers who can obtain them in unlimited quantities at the market rates ruling for the old style.—Journal of Commerce.

AT ST. VINCENT'S HOSPITAL.

Two Very Interesting Surgical Operations—Large Tumor Removed—Transplanting Skin.

An OREGONIAN representative yesterday visited that well conducted institution, St. Vincent's Hospital. The new addition erected last year gives them much needed room, and all applicants have found accommodation. Sixty patients are now under treatment and all of them speak in the highest terms of praise of the kind, patient, careful attention of the good sisters. Two cases attract much interest.

Mrs. Sheridan, of Umatilla, Oregon, entered the hospital in the early part of June, suffering from a large tumor in the abdomen, which had been growing for three years and had become so large as to be a source of constant misery and distress. It extended from the lower border of the ribs to a point below the middle of the abdomen, on the right side, and was somewhat movable and extremely firm to the touch. There being no hope of relief by any other method, its removal was determined upon by the hospital staff, Dr. Jones and Dr. [illegible], and the patient submitted to the operation on the 14th of last month. A long incision was made over it by the operating surgeon, Dr. H. J. Jones, after which it was separated with difficulty from the sound tissues around it and taken out. It was deeply seated in the abdominal walls, and so closely attached to the parts underneath that it was necessary to make an opening of considerable extent in the cavity of the abdomen, thus rendering it one of the most critical operations known in surgery. Chloroform was given, and the wound treated by the antiseptic method, as is usual in operations of a grave character. The tumor was found on examination, to be of a cancerous nature. It weighed five pounds, and had commenced to encroach on a vital portion. At the present time the wound has completely healed and the recovery of the patient is assured.

About [illegible] years ago, Miss N. Hecox, of Vancouver, then three years old, was very severely burned about the left elbow, her clothes having caught fire from burning brush. This caused the arm to draw up to an acute angle and become stiff and useless. The skin was harsh and firmly attached to the flesh, and as it broke away it would of its way through the skin, causing great irritation and running sores. A few weeks ago she was brought to the hospital for treatment. In a few days the arm was straightened, [illegible] at the joint of the elbow. This left a place as large as the palm of a man's hand without skin. To supply this want, the young lady's mother very nobly submitted to having skin cut from her arm and transferred to the arm of her daughter. The operation is performed every few days, and now more than half the space at first bare has a healthy covering. The patient can move her elbow, work her hand and fingers, and in a few weeks will have in place of a limb hitherto useless and painful, one exercising nearly all natural powers.

VERY SERIOUS STABBING AFFAIR.

A man named John Sullivan was received on board the steamer Bonita yesterday, at McGraw's landing, on the lower Columbia, who had been very dangerously stabbed during a row. He was brought to this city and taken to St. Vincent hospital for treatment. The following are the circumstances of the affair, as near as can be ascertained. The person who it is claimed did the stabbing is named Slotan. He is known as "old man Slotan," and is generally considered by his neighbors to be about half insane. Slotan lives near the bank of a creek, and owns a small boat by means of which the stream was crossed. Sullivan, it seems, came down to the creek yesterday morning, and desiring to cross over, took Slotan's skiff. Soon after, Slotan came down, and finding his boat on the other side of the creek, got very angry and wanted to know who had taken it. He returned to his house in a great rage, and armed himself with a fishing pike, a revolver and a large bowie knife. By the time Slotan got back, Sullivan had returned with the skiff. He was lying down on the grass near the bank of the creek resting when Slotan came up. Without a word of warning, Slotan jabbed the point of the pike into Sullivan's back, inflicting a very severe wound. Sullivan jumped up and attempted to defend himself; but he was savagely assaulted by Slotan with a knife. During the row Sullivan received two stabs—two in the side, one in the breast, and one on each arm. His right arm received a terrible slash above the elbow, penetrating almost to the bone. After the stabbing Slotan returned to his house. Mr. McGraw and several others came to Sullivan's assistance and conveyed him to the landing, where he was placed on board the steamer and sent to the hospital. Although very dangerously injured, none of Sullivan's wounds are considered necessarily fatal.

The deputy sheriff of Columbia county was notified of the affair, and started at once to arrest Slotan.

Wool growing in the Palouse country is fast assuming proportions and promises soon to become one of the main industries of this fast developing section. As an instance, we mention that on Thursday and Friday of last week Coppett Bros. paid out $1[illegible] for this staple, for shipment below.

Yakima Record: While at Ellensburg this week we handled some large nuggets of gold, taken from the claim of Messrs. Pike & Price on the Swauk. Something like [illegible] ounces was taken out in the last run. One large nugget was valued at $177, another $107, and a smaller one at $72. Three gentlemen now have the only profitable claim on the Swauk worked by white men, all the rest of the miners have gone into quartz on the new bonanza and at Peshastin.

In 1880 the United States census takers reported 8716 inhabitants in Walla Walla county. The assessor returned about the same number. Both the enumerator and the assessor recorded several hundred railroad builders and other transient men and women in the county. This year Assessor Jacobs returns a total population of [illegible] and says that he did not have 200 transient persons on his list. The increase over the census of 1880 amounts to 44 per cent. The assessment of 1880 amounted to $4,873,[illegible]; in 1881 the roll foots up $4,[illegible], an increase of $[illegible].

Puget Sound Sawmills.

Seattle Intelligencer.

The mills of the sound are famous from Behring Strait to the Strait of Magellan. They are incomparable with anything of their kind in that long stretch of nearly 10,000 miles. They are towns in themselves, having [illegible], occupying the site, with their wharves, etc., exclusively and giving employment to hundreds of men. In these towns are stores carrying stocks of merchandise of from $[illegible] to $150,000. Lines of great ships are owned, and frequently from four to ten vessels can be seen simultaneously lying at the docks of a single mill. These mills include from twenty to fifty dwellings each, and are peopled by from two to six hundred persons. A single company owns three of these immense establishments, with four mills capable of cutting when one of them has completed the changes now making, [illegible] feet of lumber a day, with four powerful tugboats, a score of ships and timber lands estimated at about two hundred thousand acres.

The leading mills of the sound are those at Port Gamble, Port Madison, Blakely, Madison and [illegible], Seabeck, Utsalady and Tacoma, besides which are smaller mills at New Tacoma and Seattle. The daily capacity of the larger mills, when driven, is about as follows:

Port Gamble	[illegible] feet
Seabeck	[illegible] feet
Discovery	50,000 feet
Madison	100,000 feet
Blakely	[illegible] feet
Tacoma	[illegible] feet
Utsalady	[illegible] feet
Ludlow, when completed	[illegible] feet

The New Tacoma mill [illegible]

The Milton mill [illegible] The Seattle quality of [illegible] and the Stetson & Post mill, and the Seattle Lumbering mill will be [illegible] shortly [illegible], which is intended, we understand, to be the cutting capacity of the Yesler mill. Thus the Seattle mills will soon have an aggregate daily cutting capacity of [illegible] feet of lumber, while they will play an important part in the production of the sound.

The lumber trade of the sound has always centered about Seattle. Within a radius of twenty-five miles are the great mills of Gamble, Seabeck, Madison, Blakely and Tacoma, and within fifty are all the others. The indications are that the city will draw the business to it more and more in the future.

The cut of the mills during the year ending June 30, 1881, must have been [illegible] feet or more. About [illegible] per annum are shipped to foreign countries; 25,000,000 is used at home, and [illegible] feet sent to California.

All this industry had its beginning thirty years ago, in a little waterpower mill erected in Thurston county by Simon McAllister, the capacity of which was 1000 feet or under per day, the first steam sawmill being that of H. L. Yesler in Seattle, built in 1853, with a capacity of 8000 or 10,000 feet a day. Great as has been the increase in the past, it has been small in volume compared with the certain increase of the future. It will not be surprising, ten years hence, to see on Puget sound the greatest lumbering yet witnessed on the face of the earth; logs being hauled by steam, mills cutting their 500,000 feet a day and an aggregate annual cut of [illegible] feet.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH IS OVER.

Business is quiet all over the city: but ISAAC BARMAN don't feel the effect of it.

THE REASONS ARE:

That he still continues to sell the immense stock of Clothing and Gent's Furnishing Goods, which he bought of Mr. A. MEYER at such very low figures, at prices that will astonish the closest buyer.

That his entire stock must be sold on or before the 1st day of September, in order to make room for his immense fall stock.

That he is offering Great Bargains, having reduced—

Suits from $15 00 to $10 00

Suits from $17 50 to $12 50

Suits from $20 00 to $15 00

Suits from $22 50 to $17 50

Suits from $25 00 to $20 00

That he is offering his entire stock of Furnishing Goods at 75 cents on the dollar.

That he has marked down his entire stock of Scarfs and Ties at 50 cents on the dollar.

That he is compelled to raise money, and he will not let up until he has it.

Make use of the opportunity before it is too late.

PREMATURE EXPLOSION OF THUNDER POWDER.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

A Word of Caution in Regard to the Use of Explosives.

The accident which occurred about ten days ago, by which young Heywood was so severely injured, has never yet been fully explained, though it might not be difficult of explanation. In the first statements concerning the affair a couple of errors inadvertently crept into the item. The powder used was not Giant powder, as stated, but Thunder powder, as it is called, and the accident was at [illegible] instead of Pascoe's quarry. An OREGONIAN reporter who happened to be in the vicinity of the scene of the accident yesterday made some inquiries and learned that Heywood, who was [illegible] the powder, was at the time of the accident ramming a charge into a nine feet hole in the rock, while just below him Mr. Jones and a couple of other men were at work. Three sticks of the Thunder powder had been put in, and Heywood was putting in two more to complete the charge. Mr. Jones noticed him and told him to be careful, as it was a dangerous experiment to make, but the young man answered that there was no danger and kept on as before. A moment later the charge exploded in the face of young Heywood, breaking one of his front teeth, burning his face with powder and breaking the small bone in his left arm. He was hurled backwards [illegible] fifteen feet against a wall of rock which stopped him and he fell to the ground, when Mr. Jones and his men rushed to him and picked him up. It was believed at the time that his eyesight was ruined, but it is now hoped that it will [illegible] that such a terrible consequence will not be sustained. At last the accident was kept quiet [illegible] and is likely to be a warning [illegible] to use great care [illegible]

For the past year many [illegible] parties have been [illegible] on the Pacific coast with novel [illegible] of new explosives, claiming [illegible] safer than those that have been in use [illegible] for the past [illegible] years. [illegible] been [illegible] deaths [illegible] young Heywood [illegible] of Wang [illegible] one of the safest [illegible] powders. [illegible] Paterson [illegible]

A PETITION.

[From Good Words.]

Thy latticed window open wide
Lets in the summer breeze—
The sweets of jasmine and of rose—
The sigh of leaf-crowned trees.
All summer sounds—all scents of June
Are welcome all day long—
If all of these may entrance find,
Dear love, why not my song?

Thy hand is ever open, sweet
To succor others' woe—
What gifts thou givest to their need,
But God and thou may know
And suppliants for thy charity
Unanswered never stood
Thou givest them all that hand can give
Why not give me thy hand?

In thy pure heart the poor find room,
And all who suffer, Sweet,
Whatever cause brought their doom,
Ah, then, how much more meet
To succor me, whom thou hast hurt,
Thy heart to these is true,
And to that heart they find a way
Ah! let me find one, too.

CHANCELLORSVILLE.

How the Army was Nearly Destroyed by Incompetent West-Pointers—Saved by Gen' Pleasanton—Hooker's Complete Breakdown.

[Cincinnati Gazette.]

A history of the campaign of Chancellorsville has been published by Theodore A. Dodge, of the United States army, dedicated to the members of the Military Historical Society of Massachusetts. It is a history of what the author describes as a plan admirably conceived and completely successful in its movements until it reached the decisive point, when it weakened down to a falling back to await an attack in a situation where its superior numbers were neutralized by the thicket, and where, at the best, the result could be only a repulse of the enemy, without recovering the command of the situation.

The actual result was that a thoroughly organized army, which crossed the Rappahannock in high spirits, was beaten by one-half its force. In this brief article there is no intent to review that campaign or this book, but merely to remark a point which the author does not fully bring out. The author rates very highly Hooker's work in reorganizing that army and in inspiring it with confidence; also his genius as shown in the plan of this campaign and in the orders which enabled the preliminary movements to be carried out to the letter.

With the main force he had crossed the river in the near presence of the opposing army. His crossing was above Fredericksburg, and his route was down to the rear of the enemy's line, which was on the heights back of the town, reaching from the river above to the river below. Sedgwick's corps distracted Lee's attention by crossing below Fredericksburg.

Hooker's crossing was a surprise to Lee, and his route would so threaten Lee's communications as to compel him to come out of his intrenchments and fight to save his line of supplies and retreat. This paper will not enter into the disputed question whether Sedgwick did what he was expected to, or what he ought to, in holding part of Lee's force. Wherever the blame may have been, the result was that, after the crossing had been made, Sedgwick's corps had no influence on the result.

The author speaks in the highest praise of Hooker's strategy and of the success of his movement up to the time when he halted. His plan required that he should push on towards Lee's communications. His immediate necessities required that he should get out of the wilderness into the open country. But in the very culmination of his grand strategy he halted. He seemed to lose decision and enterprise. He gave up the offensive, and stopped in the wilderness—that thicket which next year was again so destructive to that ill-fated army.

It is possible that Hooker's mind had been overtaxed with the tremendous responsibilities of his position, and that because of this exhaustion of his energies he weakened down from offensive enterprise to a defensive attitude. But if this was a splendid plan, which failed because feebly executed, on the other hand Lee broke all the rules of the art of war, and disregarded all rules of military prudence by dividing his army and sending half of it on a flank march completely across our front to make an attack on the right rear.

Had there been any generalship on our side, or even any military common sense, this would have been turned to Lee's destruction. But at this juncture an infatuation took possession of our generals that Lee was retreating. Incredible as it may seem, Jackson marched 27,000 men from back of Fredericksburg, along our front for miles, with artillery and supply trains, around the flank and rear of our right, while our generals thought it Lee's retreat.

Glimpses of this movement, which were had through openings, confirmed our generals in this delusion. We speak of them in general, although there were different degrees of this impression, and several were not content to accept the enemy's retreat as certain, and some wanted to pursue. Hooker was not fully convinced, and he sent word to Howard that he was apprehensive that the right was not sufficiently guarded and strong.

Sickles and Pleasanton, upon their own solicitation, had taken part of their troops from near the centre and moved out to observe and harass this retreat or to develop the movement, but this was too late to intercept or develop it. But the delusion had taken full possession of the mind of Gen. Howard, who was in command of the right wing, and of Gen. Devens, the second in command. They knew that Lee had gone and that there would be no fight there as well as Gen. Sherman knew that the confederate army at Corinth would not be such fools as to come and attack our troops at Pittsburg Landing, when these were going to attack them.

In that woody region the right flank could quickly have been so covered with a line of abatis and temporary works that Jackson's attack would have been his destruction, even by an inferior force. But the right was left as unguarded as if the soldiers were at a picnic, while Jackson marched round to its rear and formed his attacking columns within hearing of the jollity of the soldiers, who were turned loose for supper and a good time.

Volunteer officers were anxious because of this unguarded state of the army, and were snubbed by Howard and Devens because of their anxiety, which was attributed to their timidity. We speak from good information when we write that volunteer officers were insulted by their commanders for remarking the neglect of cavalry pickets and of other guards.

The soldiers of Howard's corps, with broken ranks and arms stacked in the road, without mounted pickets, and without any but rear sentries, were engaged in slaying beeves and cooking supper when Jackson's march burst upon their flank and rear with a fury which a volunteer officer, who was one of those that had become anxious at this unguarded state, said was like a tornado. This is the point which the historian does not bring out with sufficient plainness.

Notwithstanding Hooker's decline from his high plan, his army could not have been beaten but for the neglect of all soldiership by Gen. Howard. If but a tithe of the severity of judgment which was visited upon volunteers had been meted out to him he would have been court-martialed, and at the least would never have commanded a corps again.

But as an instance of the different measure of judgment in our war, when Gen. Sherman's terrible blunder in supposing Atlanta was evacuated, had sacrificed McPherson, and nearly sacrificed the Army of the Tennessee, and when Logan and Dodge, unaccountably deserted by Sherman, had fought that army out of the jaws of destruction, Sherman put Howard in the command instead of Logan or Dodge, because he said these were "political generals," and Howard a "professional soldier."

The rout of Howard's corps mixed it up with its beef cattle, its trains, and its artillery, and there seemed no stop to it save by darkness. The devout Jackson was now praying fondly for one more hour of daylight. The commander who did more than any other one to retard Jackson's terrible march was Pleasanton. He had been out with Sickles looking for the enemy's retreat. He had two regiments of cavalry.

He came in upon the front of Jackson's march as the fugitives of the eleventh corps were fleeing before it. Comprehending the situation at a glance he ordered Maj. Keenan with the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry to charge the enemy. It was a sacrifice, as he knew, and Keenan and his men knew, but they rode into the jaws of death while Pleasanton rapidly improved this temporary check to unlimber his own battery and get together other guns.

Under cover of his fire and canister twenty-two guns in all were got up into line. Firing double shot and canister at short range the terrible march of Jackson was checked, and then brought to a full stop. Pleasanton never had due recognition for this. It was not the way of high rewards in our war. Keenan was killed—his command practically annihilated. And then there was an example of the facility which the regular army had in blaming the volunteers for their own lack. [illegible] all that belongs to the art of war by giving out the cry that "the Dutch ran."

The fact is not mentioned by this historian that in the height of this emergency Hooker was for a time stunned by a cannon ball striking a pillar against which he stood, and that while in this state there seems to have been no one competent to act promptly for him. The [illegible] was that this army, which started out on so grand a plan, and which, if well commanded, was invincible, beaten by half its numbers, fell back across the river. Next year Gen. Grant led a larger army into the same wilderness, where, opposed by half its force, it lost 20,000 men and had to march away from the enemy. These are examples of a war in which it is supposed pretty much all was done by the genius of West Point generals.

DECLINE OF RENTS IN ENGLAND.

A Serious Prospect for Landlords and Tenants.

[Pall Mall Gazette.]

Mr. Sturge of Birmingham has made a careful investigation into the reductions of rent which have lately taken place on the reletting of farms in all parts of England, and the result is not only interesting but startling. In Lincolnshire many farms in the fen districts would be let rent free to any tenant who would pay rates and taxes; heath land has fallen 15 per cent.; marsh land, 30 to 40 per cent.; and clay land, 40 to 50 per cent. In West Norfolk farms on chalk soils have fallen about 15 per cent. Many on light sandy soils are unlet. Good corn land in Hants has fallen over 30 per cent., and is even then difficult to let; tenants cannot be found for clay land at a fall of 15 per cent., and the value of freehold land is estimated to have fallen more than a third. In Leicestershire a good 500 acre farm, lately let at 31s. an acre, has now been let on lease at 30s., the landlord having first laid out £2,500 on improvements. A 150 acre farm, half grass, has fallen from 35s. per acre to 20s. In West Shropshire many tenants have given notice to leave, others remain at reductions of from 20 to 30 per cent. In Worcestershire allowances have been made of from 25 to 30 per cent., and on one large estate only one farm is occupied, and the others will require an expenditure equal to six years' rent before they can be brought into condition again. In North Warwickshire a farm let for many years at £400 has been relet at £300, after a considerable outlay by the landlord on new buildings. Another let 150 years ago at 10s. an acre, but of late at 38s. 6d., is in the market, the tenant refusing to remain at 26s. In Central and South Warwickshire there have been reductions of 20 to 50 per cent., and a great number of farms are vacant. In one parish of 3,000 acres, four-fifths are unoccupied. In Bedfordshire new lettings are 25, 50 and 75 per cent. below old rates. A farm recently let at 36s. an acre is now occupied rent free. In Hertfordshire a farm of 400 acres is let rent free on condition that the tenant keeps it in cultivation; on an estate of 5,000 acres 1,800 have been relet at an average reduction of 27 per cent. On another property 1,600 acres are in the market. The fall in Essex is 40 to 50 per cent.; a farm let up to Michaelmas at £315 a year is now let at £100. In Oxfordshire four-fifths of an estate of 2000 acres are unoccupied, and in another part of the county twenty-one farms are to let at nominal rents. In Somerset the fall in arable land is about 35 per cent. The rental of a Gloucestershire parish extending over 2,050 acres has diminished £1,000 a year. In North Wilts 10,000 acres are to let on one estate, and a great area of land is going out of cultivation. A farm in South Wilts, recently let at £700 a year, has been let at £450. On one estate in West Sussex 5,000 acres are tenantless, and on another in West Herts eight large farms out of ten are on the owners' hands. In the south of Scotland reductions of from 20 to 50 per cent. have usually been made on new leases. It has of course become increasingly difficult to sell land unless the situation is exceptionally good, and there is every reason to expect that an enormous number of farms will be given up at Michaelmas. Good grazing and dairy farms are now the only ones for which anything like the old rents can be obtained, and landlords are willing and eager to let on terms which they would have scouted with indignation only a few years since. The seriousness of the prospect can not be exaggerated, for it is certain that thousands of laborers will be thrown out of work whose only recourse will be the parish. At present in many localities the unsatisfactory state of things causes the position of farm servants to be most wretched; and small shopkeepers in country villages are unwilling to give credit for even a loaf of bread, never feeling sure that at the end of the week their customer may not be thrown out of work. Landowners with large nominal incomes, who have to pay jointures, interest on mortgages and other charges, just as they had to do in days of prosperity, are in a sorry plight; and some whose rentals amount to tens of thousands have not at their disposal as many hundreds as they are believed to have thousands, and in a few cases the reduction has made the real income of say £5,000 out of £20,000 (the difference between gross receipts and net balance after deducting charges) absolutely disappear. It is not strange that one of the principal house agents in London should have enough "season houses" to let to fill a large volume when in other years at this time a single page would have sufficed for those on his hands.

OLD KEYS OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. Gilfillan, while treasurer of the United States completed a collection of keys to the U. S. treasury vaults and money boxes in use before the introduction of combination locks. The collection numbers fifteen keys, which have been arranged in a neat walnut case, and they decorate the walls of the treasurer's office. The first in chronological order is a veritable patriarch of the key family. It is about seven inches long, weighs over a pound, and makes a great display of notches which fitted into the complicated wards of the lock. Judging from the finish of the key the lock was evidently regarded in its day as a masterpiece of ingenuity and mechanism. Modern experts would smile at such a barrier between themselves and the glittering treasure. The known history of this key goes back at least half a century, and its custodian for years was a Virginian named Colonel Nutt, the cashier in the treasurer's office. The colonel was, according to accounts, a true type of the old-time Virginian, tall, erect, and measuring over six feet, wearing a certain air of the cavalier which would have justified some notions of the boasted chivalry of the Old Dominion. He lived on the soil of his native state, and every morning rode into Washington over the long bridge; in summer time, tying his raw-boned Virginian pacer in a grove near the department, where mighty buildings now stand, the colonel strode along the corridors of the treasury, with his spurs clanking on the paved way, and, cracking his riding-whip, swaggered into his office. His first act was to haul the immense safe-key out of a wallet he carried about his person, and to an admiring audience of accountants, tellers, clerks, messengers and boys, would preface the formality of opening the antique strapsided box by descanting on the complicated interior arrangement of the lock, and the number of tumblers the awe-inspiring instrument he held in his hand knocked down in a single turn in the intricate wards. The money boxes, too, were a never ending and fruitful theme of the venerable Nutt's admiration. He spoke of the welded straps of iron and the innumerable bolts which marked each intersection of the web.

The colonel continued in office until Virginia joined her fortunes to the conspiracy against the union, and then one afternoon, after he had drawn his pay, was last seen cantering toward the Potomac and across into his native state.

Another key, as large as Colonel Nutt's and much worn, has its notch shaped like the letter T. It is said that from this the key represented in the seal in the treasury department was designed. As the improvements in locks began, a notable change in the formation of keys is indicated. Next comes a pair that resemble the handle of a tourniquet, and following the immediate stages are two heavy brace-keys, containing in themselves a combination formed by strips of metal of different lengths and numbered. The combinations were varied by changing the arrangements of these strips in the key. As lock-picking grew to be an art, and the ingenuity of the inventor was brought into competition with the ingenuity of the burglar, the use of keys was abandoned, and from year to year, as millions of treasure and securities and notes filled the vaults, all the latest and most secure appliances were introduced. After careful and thoughtful examination the Sargent time and chronometer combination lock was adopted a few years ago. There are ten of these locks on each vault. Every night, under the superintendence of the treasurer, and by trusted and tried custodians, each chronometer in the lock is wound and set for 8:30 A. M. When once in motion there is no possible way to open it, even by the officers authorized to know the combination. No key is used, the whole delicate mechanism responding to a limit of time and the application of a word or figures to the parts forming the combination.

LOVE MAKING.

Friendly Advice to the Dear Daughters of Eve

Don't love too many at once.

Don't cry our specimen in public.

Give your little brother taffy, and get him to bed before your chap calls.

Recollect that a wedding ring on your finger is worth a good many of them in your mind.

Try to find out by some means whether your intended knows how to earn a decent living for two.

Be reasonable; don't expect a man working for $8 a week to furnish you with reserved seats at the opera every other night.

Don't be afraid to show the man of your choice that you love him, provided he frankly loves you. Love is a double-sided affair of concern, and both have a part to play.

Don't try to bring too many suitors to your feet. They have feet as well as you have, and you may see one pair of feet walking off from you some day you would be very glad to call back.

Keep your temper, if you expect your lover [illegible] to keep his. [illegible] don't expect him to put up with your humors.

Deal carefully with bashful lovers; lead them gradually to the point of proposal; [illegible] but don't let them suspect what you are at, or they might faint on your hands, or go crazy on the spot.

It is said lovers' quarrels always end with kisses. This is partly true; but if you are not careful those little spats you [illegible] end in the kisses you covet being given to some other girl!

If it is possible, try to suit your sisters, cousins, aunts, grandfathers, neighbors, friends and acquaintances when you happen to fall in love. If you can't suit them all, don't worry, for the thing has never been done yet.

If you use powder, don't give yourself away. For instance, it would be well to spread a handkerchief over the shoulder of his broad cloth before you lean thereon. He will be a green, depend on it, to suspect the reason. If his mustache happens to look a little powdery, there are several ways in which it could be brushed off.

Don't imagine that a husband can live as a lover does—on kisses and moonlight. He will come home to his meals hungry as a bear, and any little knowledge of cookery you can pick up during courtship is about the best provision you can make for future happiness.

Remember that nature has put every man under the necessity of having a mother, and that the latter is not in any way to blame if she is regarded as the bitter part of a sugar-coated matrimonial pill. If you feel in duty bound to be her sworn enemy, postpone the duty till you know something about her.

Don't seek advice in love-affairs from an old maid who has been crossed in love, a bachelor who has been jilted, a woman who married her husband's pocket-book, or a man who happens to be henpecked. Don't confide in your girl friends; to keep a secret in a love affair would kill them. Don't consult your minister; he'll take the marriage fee in view. If you go to your family physician, he will say your liver is affected in place of your heart. If you must get instructions from somebody, why not ask your mother how she used to manage things with your father? True love didn't run any smoother in old times than it does to-day, and, since she knows how it is herself, we can't think just now of any better way to advise you.
